Please note... this is a google earth photo, taken from space, and has an unknown born on =ate.
Having said that, it's like a Face Book photo that tells =e I Done want to ask for a first date....
I've tequested current photos... =ut none have reached my inbox yet...

Glancing through the photos shows me no difference =etween the pictured boat, in Alaska, and the LSJ Barge we have now =xcept for the sky box installed, a bit more cargo space and a longer =amp.

The pictured =oat is 75' by 20'

The existing LSJ barge is 74' by =1'.

=our not gonna get a lot more on the pictured boat.

The sky box is going to give =ou another 15 feet of deck space but there will be precious little =xtra width to make it useful through a narrow ramp =pening.

=nbsp;It's bigger but only just.

Let's say it will fit 3 =oncrete trucks.

At 35 tons per truck that's 105 tons in trucks =nd cement. Add the weight and instability of the skybox being elevated, =nd I'm doubtful that thing can haul that kind of weight period, =ot to mention carry it safely.

My initial thoughts,

Respectfully =tated.
