Luis was here for a bit this morning. He looked at all the floors and took notes on what phase each one was in. He said he would be in touch with you, Rich.

The scratch in the master is visible and not in a place that can be easily covered. I can't imagine JE wouldn't want it repaired, but to do so will involve stripping the master back down and sanding, then putting all the coats back on.

Also, I asked him about discoloration around the edges. He said it was from condensation in the walls. He said the only thing that can really be done is that they can go around the edges with a fine line of a matching paint they have that blends with the floor which would be recommended unless we're planning to add trim or quarter round.

See attached photos of discoloration and scratch.
