On the one hand it is absurd. On the other hand it is =otentially a very serious situation. I would need to do some researc= to know just how serious the consequences realistically might be. <=iv>

I have read in the paper that one possible remedy plaint=ffs intend to seek is the nullification of the "illegal" a=reement and the prosecution of a number of cases against you. There =ould seem to be a whole host of impediments to any such radical and outrag=ous course of action like that both of a legal and equitable nature. =However, I am a worst case scenario person ALWAYS and do not think a crimi=al defense lawyer every should be anything but that.

<=iv>Perhaps you have done the research already or have counsel who has and =eel you have a sense of exactly what the worst case scenario is. I d=n't know; but I also would not take anyone else's word for=it.

The potential consequences are of course the =ost important thing insofar as any consequence directly affects you (actio= against Acosta etc. not really your problem). But the separate and =elated issue is what if anything to do about the fact that the complete st=ry you have described in the prospective op-Ed drafts you have sent to me =as never come out - nor has anything that in any way challenges the popula= rendition and characterization of you as predator, monster, etc. </=iv>

And as you correctly anticipated some t=me ago, that is a real problem and has perhaps been part of what has led t= this snowballing with no pushback of any kind (notwithstanding all the ho= shot lawyers you had by your side all through the deal and after - where =re they now?).

Without seeing the papers in the c=se now before judge Marra I don't feel like I can give any meaning=ul advice on either the legal or pr front. But I do know that you ne=d some good advice now and moving forward.
