I poke to Roadruck. He told me that given the dearth of information available through normal computer searching that he uses, he thinks that to do more would require "boots on the ground". He thinks we need to retain local PI and he can recommend someone from his network. Roadruck says the criminal check and the Civil case check in New York came up empty and that New York is not as public info friendly as Florida. For example, in Florida, if he could not find anything on the public records of convictions, he would call local police and see if they had anything in their files. Roadruck says that kind of info is not readily available in New York. Should I ask him to recommend someone to do "leg work" and see what they can come up with about [REDACTED]? Roadruck tells me that he bills $150 an hour, but is not sure what someone in NY would bill.
