You mean fabric on chairs and divans and using leather sparingly as ac=ents? If so, this would be a great, sophisticated look and very comfortabl=.

What you refer to as "hand rails" is called side ledges.♦=A0 The "handrails" are the upper thin pieces of wood in the PSU&=39;s that run the length of the cabin- the rails that you may grab when st=nding and go to grab to stabilize yourself during turbulence.

<=r> Now for your question about an alternative material(s) for the ledges and t=bles:

<=r>

W= discussed the ledges in leather as an alternative material. Obvious=y wood veneer or carbon fiber. A fabric will not hold up over time- =specially with a drink/cup holder in this area.

<=r>

T=ere really aren't any other materials I could see implemented.

<=r>

I=am confident that when we change the wood to a stained quartered oak, the =hole feel of the aircraft will change. The wood in the aircraft just=dates it and make it look like an old 550.

<=r>

I=like the colors and textural feel you are going after and I am contemplati=g wither a warm gray or deep taupe for the carpet. The new wood, bru=hed "not shiny" plating will be the finishing touch to creating a couture styled interior that will make your aircraft look brand new.
