What you refer to as "hand rails" is called side ledges. =AO The "handrails" are the upper thin pieces of wood in the PSU&=39;s that run the length of the cabin- the rails that you may grab when st=nding and go to grab to stabilize yourself during turbulence.

Now for your question about an alternative material(s) for the ledges and t=bles:

We discussed the ledges=in leather as an alternative material. Obviously wood veneer or carb=n fiber. A fabric will not hold up over time- especially with a drin=/cup holder in this area.

There really aren't=any other materials I could see implemented.

I am confident that whe= we change the wood to a stained quartered oak, the whole feel of the airc=aft will change. The wood in the aircraft just dates it and make it =ook like an old 550.

I like the colors and t=xtural feel you are going after and I am contemplating wither a warm gray =r deep taupe for the carpet. The new wood, brushed "not shiny&q=ot; plating will be the finishing touch to creating a couture styled interior that will make your aircraft look brand new.
