Even rough hand sketch better than words for me

One other thought. I feel the eastern side that faces St. John should sit on a stone base like a fortress, even if we have a lower floor. It will give the appropriate feel to the base of the building, which will sit on top. I will push it further away from the pool. I was just trying to reduce wall height. I will send a revised site plan and elevations next week.

What about a light structure like a vertical trellis with plants on it to form the back drop for the courtyard? We can also put palm in front of it on the courtyard side. If you do two floors, what do you want to put on the lower level? The primary area to incorporate a lower level is under the terraces facing St. John. The main part of the building sits mostly on grade. The terrace is between 12 – 14 feet wide, but we can make it wider. </=pan>

Jeffrey,

Attached =s the site plan that incorporates the new topographic information. It also=shows a slight revision in the bathroom on the south side based upon our r=cent discussions. The bathroom will be at the same level as the pool deck =nd we have pushed it back to reduce the height of the base wall. The talle=t wall we have now is 14 feet. We have moved the entire building further w=st to accomplish this. Our design approach is to have the building sit on =n elevated platform similar to a temple. The existing sculpture on the eas=ern end will be incorporated into the platform as well as two other potent=al sculpture sites lining up with the palms. We have also looked at the po=sibility incorporating some large urns at those locations in lieu of sculp=ures. On the western side, we have developed two planting areas with palms=and shrubs to screen the pool visibly from the main part of the house. Thi= will require us having to remove the existing stone seat. The eastern sid= will include a 12 feet wide terrace facing St. John. I feel we now have a=solution that successfully merges the formality of the existing courtyard =nd pool area within the confines of the existing topography.
