Hi Kathy,

I can work ar=und that for a couple of days. I realize the choice of available tv option= is off the charts. Building a niche for a tv, automatically restricts you=to future size upgrades. However, one dimension that (in your exhaustive s=arch) should be dialed in ,is the thickness. Currently, readily available =elevisions are available in a LED,LCD,and Plasma format. I'm no techie= I.e. I deal with the application of math, chemistry, physics, history, an= reading comprehension, on a daily basis. Semi-conductors are outside of m= knowledge base. Once all those little bytes have been neatly packaged, ga=e on.

See if you can narrow your search to present =e with the overall thickness of the television. Gabby has specified that t=e existing wall will be padded approximately 2", and many LED type te=evisions fall within that dimension. If, however, you opt to go with a thi=ker tv, we may need to forego the articulating arm, and simply bolt the th=ng to the wall (So that it doesn't project beyond wall plane)Sorry for the long-winded explanation, but I thought it wise=to give you some parameters.

Hi Jim,

I am not going to use the same tv (too smal=), but am not quite sure what size the new one will be. Do you need =o know by Tuesday?

Hi Kathy,

Thanks for the follow u= on the ceiling. I pushed the framing crew back one day (They will start o= Tuesday)

In preparation for the framing,=I noticed that there will be a niche for the television. Ideally, the tv w=uld be mounted to an articulating arm, so it can be set flush with the wal= surface, when not in use. The dimensions of the niche, would be determine= by the tv. Were you planning on using the tv that you already have? If so= where is it currently located? If not, did you have a particular model in=mind?

=hanks again,
