
From: Dan Ariely <[REDACTED]>
Sent: Sunday, March 20, 2011 7:55 PM
To: Jeffrey Epstein
Cc: [REDACTED]
Subject: Some data about forgivness
Attachments: crimes.xlsx; Untitled attachment 00241.htm

Dear Jeffrey,

Sometime ago, after we met =or the first time, I started wondering what makes people forgive =thers.

So -- I asked about 500 people how =likely they are to forgive, befriend, hire people who were accused of =ifferent crimes, after they have served their sentence according to the =aw.

This is far from an ideal study, but what =ou see in the attached file is that crimes related to sex do worse than =nything else (even murder), and that violations or government rules are =he easiest for people to forgive.

I =ealize that this is not good news for you, and I have no intentions to =ffend, but I am sending it to you in case you are interested. And =f you want to talk about where to take this research or other =uestions, let me =now.

=/html>=