Dear Friends and Neighbors,

Miami Beach is taking action on climate change, because our community could not simply afford to wait and witness the effects of global warming. Our streets are now being raised and pumps are in place, all in preparation for the rising seas and tides.

I wanted to share with you some of the quotes from the recent cover story from The Christian Monitor Climate change crusade goes local:

"We may not have all the answers, but we're going to show that Miami Beach is not going to sit back and go underwater. We did not ask for climate change or sea level rise, but we are at the tip of the spear. We don't debate the reason why; we just come up with solutions," says Mayor Philip Levine.

"If the seas are continuing to rise, and the tidal events are higher than the inland elevation, we have to pump," The facts are the facts, and we have to deal with them," says Public Works Director Eric Carpenter.
