I think he was a little confused about what you were doing as a friend and what you were doing as a business relationship.

He is fragile right now and navigating through a space where it is hard to trust - as I am sure you know.

I don't think either one of you anticipated this would drag out for this long or be this complicated.
I'm sure he expected to pay for lawyers and have them engage on his behalf but I just don't think he ever planned to involve anyone else including you or me.

One way or another the lawyer(s) really do need to put an end to these discussions as they are now extending into delays of questionable value.

Just know that I have started the conversation with him and I do not know where it will go. Or when.

Thank you for your patience, and as always your friendship - especially as I try to navigate through this process as an observer

It is probably the hardest time of my life too since I'm going through a lot of personal/professional struggles that have been overshadowed by other stuff
Hopefully soon everything will turn a corner.

Let me know what I can do differently or what I should ask him to do differently going forward.
